Cellular TECH TIP! What you need to know about Data

Mobile phones that have a mobile browser (internet) feature enabled on the device allows you to use the internet wherever you have a cellular network signal. Internet usage that is measured on your mobile phone is called data. Wi-fi is a separate wireless internet connection you can join via your wireless router when at home or using wi-fi hotspots in places like coffee shops, restaurants and at work. Using wi-fi to obtain an internet signal on your phone will allow you to use applications like email, Facebook, Twitter and games without a cellular data plan or incurring cellular pay-per-use data (internet) charges on your bill.

Helpful tips to save on unwanted data charges:

- Check your application permissions - some apps run in the background using data without you knowing.
- Use wi-fi wherever possible- this means you won't use up your data allowance or incur pay-per-use charges.
- Turn off auto updating of apps or e-mail so you won't use your cellular data.

If you have questions regarding data or your cellular data usage please call or visit one of our Quadro locations. A Customer Service Representative would be happy to assist you.
